Part 2

Part 2, you will hear a woman introducing the summer clubs. First you have some time to look at questions 11 to 14.

Now listen carefully and answer questions 11 to 14.

Hi everyone! I'm Clara from the City Museum, here to tell you about our Summer Clubs for kids aged 7-14. We are offering four fantastic programmes running from July to August, each with its own unique focus. Let me walk you through them first...

First up: Early Communication. This isn't just about talking! (11) Children will study ancient Egyptian hieroglyphs –those pictorial symbols. They'll inscribe messages on clay tablets using reeds. They will discover how pictorial symbols evolved into written language! So, it's all about visual storytelling."

Next, Go with the Medieval. This program develops fine motor skills while enhancing concentration. (12) They'll decorate manuscripts with gold leaf, stitch parchment pages, and bind them into leather-covered books.

Now Egyptomania –consistently popular! They'll calculate slopes, debate construction theories... (13) Children will construct a model of Khufu's pyramid. While some children might hope to excavate royal treasures, no digging is permitted.

Finally, Archaeology 101. (14) Here, they reconstruct authentic Roman pots utilized for cooking. This activity is ideal for children fascinated by food history.

Before you hear the rest of the talk, you have some time to look at questions 15 to 20.

Now listen and answer questions 15 to 20.

Now, you might be wondering where all these exciting activities take place — let me walk you through our facilities! While the entire five floors of our museum all have exhibits, (15) the majority of them are housed in a dedicated room, garden sessions are held on Fridays only.

For safety and compliance, all children must be dropped off by a parent or guardian. This ensures we maintain accurate attendance records and authorize pickups. Please note that both our South Gate and the main front entrance remain closed on weekday mornings. (16) For safe and convenient morning drop-offs, we require all children to be brought to the designated bus stop area on Park Lane. Our staff, wearing high-visibility vests, will be waiting there for them.

We also organize special movie screenings for children aged above 7 — always free of charge! Think inspiring documentaries about young explorers or animated tales with historical twists. Visual storytelling makes them accessible even to non-native speakers. (17) While the films are in English, they're carefully selected to be both meaningful and amusing.

At pickup time, kids aged above 12 have more flexibility. They don't need to wait for parents — (18) they can walk home with friends, but no one is permitted to leave alone! Groups must leave together via the South Gate.

Now, about cancellations and refunds — here's how it works: If you cancel early enough, we can give a partial refund up to 80%. (19) However, if insufficient numbers sign up for a particular club, we will issue full refunds to all registered participants.

Finally, about our membership program that many parents have asked. Don't worry, the membership is completely optional! Membership is not required, our summer clubs are open to everyone. But if you join as a member, (20) you'll gain access to substantial discounts on all summer clubs.

That's everything from me. Any questions?

Part 2

Part2. You will hear a woman giving a presentation about Insight Hub, a charity for the blind people. First you have some time to look at questions 11 to 16

Now listen carefully and answer questions 11 to 16.

Good afternoon everyone. Today I'll be sharing details about our Insight Hub, a charity dedicated to supporting the blind community. Let me walk you through its history, operations, and some fascinating volunteer experiences.

Let's start with a common misunderstanding about our origins. You might have seen our website stating that we've been "The Home for Blind Empowerment" since 1990. But here's the twist – that's actually when we rebranded! The real story begins much earlier. (11) As for 1975? That's when our founder first conceptualized the idea during her psychology studies, but the actual launch took five more years. Back in 1980, a group of university students converted an old library into a braille transcription center. It wasn't until 1985 that we moved to our current building, and the official "Home" title came later in the 90s.

Now, you might wonder, how does a niche charity like ours gain visibility? Surprisingly, TV commercials aren't our style; they're expensive and scattergun. (12) What really works is authentic storytelling. Last year's survey showed 67% of new volunteers joined after hearing personal accounts from Mrs. Carter, a retired teacher we assisted, or Mr. Patel who now reads financial reports through our audio service. Current staff do spread the word too – about 23% of referrals come from our team's social media posts – but nothing beats firsthand success stories.

Volunteering here isn't without its challenges, though. Let me paint you a picture: Our vintage 1980s building has character but also quirks. (13) Before last winter, the heating system was so temperamental that the east wing recording booths felt like refrigerators! We've since installed smart thermostats, but volunteers still joke about the "arctic summer" of 2021. Someone said it felt much colder than before, even though we bought and installed a new boiler. But besides that, volunteers got nothing to complain about. For example, we have plenty of parking space, and with our free shuttle from the metro, transport to the site will never be a problem. In addition, someone assumed that we must have had tech problems. Well, forget clunky computers; we've got AI-assisted recording software now.

Funding is always a hot topic. Our government constantly supports us, covering approximately 15% through disability access initiatives. And while we're grateful for occasional corporate sponsorships – like Tech Corp's $10,000 grant last quarter – these are unpredictable. (14)The real heroes are our 8,000 individual donors. Take Mr. Dawson, a retired postman who's donated £5 monthly since 2005. That kind of steady support funds 73% of our operations.

This brings me to our current volunteer priorities. Right now, we're in the thick of our annual audit. (15)Teams are meticulously cross-referencing donation logs with audio files – ensuring every £1 contributed corresponds to a recorded chapter. It's less glamorous than cataloguing new materials, that's next month's task, or studio renovations, which were already completed last spring, but absolutely vital for transparency.

Looking ahead, our volunteers are buzzing with ideas. The swimming program's been a hit since 2018, but there's growing demand for creative outlets. (16)Music therapy workshops are top of the wish list — imagine helping blind children explore soundscapes! Cooking classes were proposed too, but safety concerns about kitchen navigation put that on hold.

Before you hear the rest of the talk, you have some time to look at questions 17 to 20.

Now listen and answer questions 17 to 20.

Now, let's discuss reading trends by the blind. (17-18)Academic materials are soaring – last term we converted 1,200 textbooks for university students, triple 2020's numbers. (17-18)Magazines are another growth area; we now produce audio versions of 17 periodicals monthly, from Science Weekly to Gardener's Digest. Fiction? Surprisingly, demand dropped 40% as commercial audiobooks boom. Poetry and travel guides remain steady but unremarkable – about 50 requests monthly.

Finally, the million-dollar question: what materials make volunteers sweat? You might think legal documents or school textbooks would be demanding, but we've developed standard templates for those. (19-20) Knitting manuals top the list — try describing cable stitch diagrams without visuals! (19-20) Car enthusiasts' requests are equally tough; explaining turbocharger schematics verbally requires serious creativity. And when it comes to Biographies, those are our volunteers' favorites.

Part 2

Part 2, you will hear a man give us some details about a photography competition in Wellsway. First you have some time to look at questions 11 to 16.

Now listen carefully and answer questions 11 to 16.

Hello everyone! Welcome to the Wellsway Photography Competition information session. I'm David, your host today. The competition attracts a lot of candidates each year, and I'll walk you through everything you need to know for this year's Wellsway Photography Competition.

Now, this competition is open to almost anyone with a camera, or even a digital mobile phone—but there are a couple of rules. First, you must be a resident of England—so if you're living here permanently, you're good to go! And we do have an age limit, anyone who is above 12 can participate the competition. But here's the catch: you can't be a professional photographer. Well, if photography is your full-time job—say, you earn money from selling your photos or doing commercial shoots—then unfortunately, this isn't the competition for you. (11) But if you are a student, or just someone who loves taking photos for fun? Perfect! We want to see your creativity!

So, I know what you're thinking: What do I get out of this? Great question! Let's break it down. Every participant will have the chance to improve their teamwork skill, because every two competitors will be paired to work in a project. And each one of them will receive a free ticket for a special exhibition in the city museum. (12) As for the lucky twelve candidates who made their way to the final stage of the competition, personalised feedback from our judges will be given. It includes tips on lighting, composition, and storytelling etc. But wait, there's more.

(13) When the top two winners finally accomplish the competition, they will be awarded with £5,000 each. If I won, I would take the opportunity to escape from work and spend the money on my vacation. And they might have the chance to display their photograph at our grand exhibition next month.

Alright, let's move on to submission guidelines. This part's super important, so listen carefully.

First, your photo summary. We don't want a technical manual here—no need to list your camera settings or lens types. (14) Instead, concentrate on how your photographs connect to each other. Are your images about family bonds? Environmental issues? Social change? Tell us the story behind them. When it comes to the subjects in your photos, like people, pets or objects, you can decide whether to include them in your photo summary.

Next, file organization. This might sound boring, but trust me, it matters! (15) All your photos must be in a single folder—not scattered across multiple files. Label it clearly with your name and the word “Submission”. I know some of your work cover a variety of topics, but there's no need to categorize them with background information.

Easy, right? Oh, I must have forgot to mention, we take color photographs as well as black and white ones, and it's your decision about the amount of your entries. Some people only submit a couple of photos, while others intend to include as many as possible. And don't forget the deadline! March 10th at midnight—no exceptions. (16) Once you hit that submit button, you can't revise your files anymore, not even a tiny edit.

Before you hear the rest of the talk, you have some time to look at questions 17 to 20.

Now listen and answer questions 17 to 20.

Now, let me share some highlights from past winners to inspire you. Sarah Thompson took first place with her series “Invisible Lives”— (17) shots of street people sleeping in parks. One photo showed a man's face half-hidden by shadows with the caption: “Have you really seen me?” It was heartbreaking but unforgettable.

And last year's runner-up, James Carter. His series “Back to Basics” showed families growing their own food and kids playing with handmade toys. The message? (18) “Life doesn't need to be complicated.” We had many photographers presented photos related to daily life. I remember a hilarious series on chaos with umbrellas flying in the wind and people crowded into the buses to go to work in the morning.

Then there was Lucy Park, she captured (19) an abandoned shopping mall with broken windows, and there was a huge car park in the center. At the far end, a bridge stretching over old train tracks. (19) The whole city center's quiet, just trash blowing down streets where nobody's around anymore. And this photo reminds me of some stunning photos of ancient castles from a participant last year, beautiful castles, really.

And let's not forget Tom Wilson. This black-and-white photo really makes you think. There's this massive parliament building – all grand columns and statues, but here's the twist – (20) at the back there are factories with rusted machinery—symbols of industries long gone. Makes you wonder, doesn't it? Like, are authorities' decision shaping our society? The photo had a caption that read: "Progress left us behind." It was a bold critique, and the judges loved it!
